

Chamber Recall — what he actually said

Write his words, not a summary of them. A sentence you cannot act on is still worth keeping.

date _____

chamber _____

1 Today's list

Open it and say nothing. What does he look at first? Does the ordering make sense to him before it is explained?

2 The Recall Card

Open one for a patient who has been before. Ask him to find the one thing he would most want to know.

how long it took him to find it: seconds · did he find it?

3 What is on it that he does not need

The most useful question on this sheet. A card with less on it is a card read faster.

4 What is missing that he would have to ask the patient anyway

Not verified. The history the front desk took is walled off in brown and marked not verified until he confirms it. Is that line drawn where he would draw it? Would he trust it more, or less, than what he writes himself?

The questions, the writing, and the verdict

page 2

Second half. Sections 5 and 6 are the ones that decide whether this is worth twelve weeks.

5 The intake questions

Read him the questions the desk asks. Are these the ones he wants asked, in this order, in this wording?

- Any question he would remove?
- Any he would add — bearing in mind nothing about menstruation, pregnancy, mental health, alcohol or home life is ever asked at a front desk?
- Any wording that is wrong in Bangla?

6 The consultation and the prescription

Let him type one. Then confirm it, and show him that the record locks and an amendment is recorded rather than a rewrite.

7 Twenty seconds, honestly

Not "do you like it". Ask: on a Tuesday evening with forty patients waiting, is this faster than the file you keep now, or slower?

The three things only he can do. Nothing real happens until these are done, and nobody else can do them. Get a date against each one before you leave the room.

Write the red flag rules — by _____ Approve the consent wording, with a lawyer — by _____

Fill in the prescription letterhead — by _____

Anything he asked for that is not on this sheet.